Hi Milcho,

Thank you for writing the essay “Truth and Fiction Art and Faith”. I believe a documentary film is perceived by the audience as being a different basic color than the narrative film using actors or than the narrative film with actors as well the caption “This is based on a true story”. With “Mothers” you painted in these different colors. In your essay when you describe the existence of these colors it was revelatory to me. It was a phenomenon that I had never thought of so clearly: how articulate the difference is in the audience’s perception of each of the styles described above.

I was also struck by the type of filmmaking that you carry out with “Mothers” a filmmaking where the artist’s faith in a work becomes the unifying force for disparate styles within it. In this kind of film the director is a very very important player. The fact that you took as you said the leap of faith in your commitment and relation to the work even though you were altering the form in a way which could be deemed as shocking is extremely impressive to me. You are doing something very important culturally. I believe that cultures get sick of themselves and to end this sickness they need to change the form of their art. And I truly feel that even if the change in an art form that an artist attempts seems unimaginable or very unusual at first that’s OK because they still may be leading the way to a needed change. Making “Mothers” took a lot of courage. Many artists now use found objects in their paintings thanks to artists like Picasso and Rauschenberg, but those two had to ignore the power of a lot of tradition in the art of painting to do what they did. It could seem unrelated to you but what comes to mind is the thought of Steven Spielberg struggling to finish the movie “Jaws” going greatly over his time and his budget so that it was the way that he wanted it and through doing this possibly leading the way to a new type of movie which is still dominant today.

During the question and answer after the screening of “Mothers” you stated something to the effect that every director will direct the same story differently, that the story doesn’t matter that much. I wanted to tell you that I believe this is an extremely extremely important thing to understand, but it isn’t at all obvious. I’m really glad that you stated it so clearly.

Thanks a million for “Mother’s” and the “Five Drops of Dream” show.

Sincerely, Brian

Manchevski’s iconoclastic feature Mothers captures the heartbreaking state of contemporary Macedonia through the eyes of several mothers who are everything from dedicated, neglectful, loving and absent.”

(Origin Theatre Balkan Mini-Fest at Lincoln Center)

“With this gradation Manchevski emphasizes that reality is more bizarre and crueler than any fiction. In addition to the very original directorial approach, the film is also dominated by a sharp critique of a system that supports police dysfunctionality and judicial inefficiency, leaving the citizens to live in insecurity and fear. The interesting genre gradation and stories which are all astonishing in their own ways will leave a strong impression even on the more demanding viewers.”

(Croatian TV)

“[Mothers is a] devastatingly stark, yet ultimately compassionate portrait of mothers, violence and the state.”

(Amy Guggenheim)

“Mothers is a very strange film, sometimes sophisticated, poignant and often elliptical. […] One of the most interesting and original filmmakers of recent years […] One of those authors who are not afraid to face the genres and to push the boundaries.”

(Diego Pierini, LoudVision)

“Mothers debunks the notion that documentaries can tell the truth.”

(Virginia Wright Wexman, Offscreen)

“Art or death. Opposing compromise, opposing image consumerism.”

(Fulvia Caprara, La Stampa)

“Genius director […] Groundbreaking poignant films […] Dizzying dialectic […] Rave review […] Milcho wants us to think. Isn’t that what great art should do? […] Better than fiction in its outrageous irony.”

(Vanessa McMahon, fest21.com / filmfestivals.com)

“Manchevski goes beyond the literal -- to explore a deeper realm where sexuality, motherhood and the art of storytelling reside in conflict. […] Mothers is a return to form for filmmaker Milcho Manchevski.”

(The Cleveland Plain Dealer)

(Zitty Berlin)

“Mothers offers a vision between truth and fiction.”

(Diario De Las Palmas)

“Painfully beautiful.”

(Duma)

“A provocative and innovative film from Macedonia that blurs the line between reality and fiction. An intensely engaging film, Mothers is not only a study on how reality is perceived and recorded, but also an examination of how women survive in a contemporary post-war culture.”

(Clevelandfilm.org)

(Connor McGrady, Brooklyn Rail)

“Manchevski gradually reveals the corruption and the failure of the Macedonian investigative and judicial system. […] Manchevski’s esthetic experiment proves successful and confirms -- especially in the two fiction episodes -- his extraordinary talent as a storyteller of images and moods, his skills in directing actors of every age and his ability to suggest hints instead of verifying theories.”

(Giovanella Rendi, close-up.it)

“Mothers is a daring, provocative, controversial film that explores the deepest human emotions: love and fear, while searching for the truth in between the two. […] Mothers will not give you refuge from reality, but - on the contrary - it will make you look at reality and oneself with eyes wide open.”

(Rochester Democrat & Chronicle)

“Structurally unusual, almost experimental and a very exciting film. […] A powerful punch in the stomach to the Macedonian society.”

(Dubravka Lakic, Politika)

“Provoking deep reflection and polemic.”

(slovesa.net)

(Märkische Oberzeitung)

“Compelling Mothers mixes truth and fiction. […] The story’s true power lies in its depiction of social change.”

(Arab Times)

“All three stories contain a hidden web of lies and betrayals, constructing a powerful final act about community and respect.”

(Radmila Djurica)

“One sad film. […] Macedonian reality - exposed in Mothers by Milcho Manchevski’s talented hand, mind and camera - is twisted, depressing and ugly.”

(Milen Radev, Svobodata.com)

“[Mothers is an] operation completely extraneous to the conceptual and aesthetic codes of contemporary cinema. […] Manchevski’s epic humanism finally returns.”

(CineClandestino.it)

“A really subtle exploration of truth and fiction in three deliberately diverse episodes, courageously pushing the boundaries between fiction and documentary in order to exert and negotiate a powerful feeling.”

(The Official Jury elucidation on the Belgrade FEST award to Mothers)
“Original storytelling and courageous experimenting with the film language and genres. ... Subtle and truthful storytelling.”
(The Critics’ Jury elucidation on presenting the Neboja Djukelic Award at Belgrade FEST to Mothers)

“He composes [the stories] in a way where they collide and merge at the same time. [...] While we watch, we start to doubt the documentary and trust more and more the artistic, the intuitive, the dramatic. The bonds between elements exist only in the mind of the spectator.”
(Rada Sharlandzhieva, Lik)

“Mothers begins with fiction, indeed with the fabrication of a lie, moves on to an attempt at the fabrication of a myth and ends in the shattering imagery of the real, where no fabrication is possible. [...] There is no easy reading of Mothers, only a need for us to work with the filmmaker to uncover its many meanings.”
(Piers Handling, Toronto International Film Festival Director)

Mothers opens up lines between documentary and fiction at the same time that it also blurs them. [...] Such moments give Manchevski’s film a special place in contemporary cinema that should be viewed by audiences around the world. [...] Many scenes and moments that will stay with you long after viewing the film.” (Andrew Horton, Script)

“Milcho Manchevski knows how to make a movie, as was demonstrated by his assured, Oscar-nominated debut film Before the Rain, which made Stephen Spielberg sit up and request a meeting. Its three intertwined love stories have been cited as precedent for the three stories of Mothers, but Mothers reminded me of a full, old-fashioned movie palace program. [...] I was never less than engaged.”
(Thomson on Hollywood, Indiewire, review by Anne Thomson)

“Oscar-nominated Macedonian director Milcho Manchevski mixes fiction with documentary in a film that hits home on an emotional rather than intellectual level.”
(Hollywood Reporter)

“Manchevski’s deft handling of the various materials is both conceptually challenging and thoroughly satisfying.”
(Eye Weekly, reviewed by Chris Bilton)

“Macedonian director Milcho Manchevski continues down his distinctive artistic path.” (Hollywood Reporter)

“Beautiful art about ugly reality.” (Vest Daily)

“An intriguing narrative puzzle divided into three contrasting sections: a vignette centred on two schoolgirls; a longer story about a trip to the countryside; and a documentary about a serial killer. Together they add up to a wry, sceptical reflection on the nation’s past, present and future.” (The Age)
On Milcho Manchevski’s Mothers (2011)

ANDREW HORTON

Two young girls with cell phones report a male flasher to the local police even though they never actually see him. A young documentary film team enters an isolated country village to film the only two remaining residents: an elderly brother (“Grandpa”) and sister (“Grandma”) who haven’t said a word to each other in sixteen years. Finally, a group of retired cleaning ladies, all of them mothers, are discovered raped and murdered, and an investigation of the crime commences.

What do these three seemingly disparate tales have in common, and where do documentary and fiction begin and end?

The award-winning writer/director Milcho Manchevski invites us to answer these questions and unify the three narratives in his latest film (script) Mothers (2010).1

Manchevski built a career in the United States where he made numerous short films, published books of fiction and photography, staged performance art, taught at the NYU film school, and directed episodes of HBO’s The Wire. Mothers, however, which recently premiered at the 2010 Toronto Film Festival, is set and was shot entirely in his native Macedonia.

Also set and (partially) filmed in the former Yugoslav republic, Manchevski’s Oscar-nominated feature debut Before the Rain (1994)2 liberated mid-90s audiences from a surplus of CNN-style Yugoslav War coverage. In place of dry reportage, Before the Rain offers picturesque Macedonian landscapes and thrusts audiences into the lives of complex Christian and Muslim characters and their dysfunctional family dynamics. Both films (scripts) present three narratives that have no direct link to one another, but Mothers, unlike Before the Rain, doesn’t focus on the clash of Islamic and Christian cultures or on politics or family feuds. Instead, as Manchevski suggests, it’s a film (script) “from Macedonia” rather than one “about Macedonia.”3

By presenting three autonomous narratives in the same film (script), Manchevski allows the viewer to build his or her own bridges between them. This highly-personal process of generative linking partially explains his latest film (script)’s title, as well as its feminine atmosphere, and challenges audiences to view Mother through a feminine lens. While Hollywood, like most other worldwide cinema, routinely creates “male-centered” films (scripts) without women at the center, Manchevski’s latest effort also illustrates ways in which mothers, daughters, grandmothers, and wives find ways to survive in a contemporary post-war culture.

The construction of reality is as thematically important to Mothers as gender issues are. The film (script) effectively erases the lines that divide documentary and fiction and explores how and why different forms of reality are recorded and destroyed. As producer Christina Kallas suggests, Mother “blurs the lines between fiction and documentary stylistically. But this ... has to do with our perception rather than with the director’s intention to manipulate you .... [Mothers] is completely devoid of such intentions.”

For example, the first story merges fact and mendacity in a particularly contemporary, YouTube-age way: nine year old girls Bea and Kjara take photos with their cell phones and invent stories about what they see, including one about a fictitious male flasher. The three young filmmakers try to create a record of a bygone culture before it disappears but record Grandpa burning his photographs and thereby destroying his past. In the final story, investigators -- ignorant of circumstances and contributing factors -- must invent reasons why a group of mother–maids were raped and killed.

Manchevski’s film (script) also presents excellent characters and performances. Emilija Stojkovska and Milijana Bogdanoska play the blithely innocent and devilishly cunning pair of nine year old girls. The would-be documentarians, Ana (Ana Stojanoska), Kole (Vladimir Jacev), and Simon (Dimitar Gjorgjievska) negotiate a love triangle, and Grandpa (Salaetin Bilal) and Grandma (Ratka Radmanovic) each give “old age” new life. Lending Mothers a final sense of vérité, the actual residents of Kičevo are interviewed as part of the third narrative’s murder investigation.

Manchevski’s latest also avoids the easy “happy ending” offered by film (scripts) such as Niki Caro’s Whale Rider (2002).4

Instead, Manchevski, who admits to the influence of Dostoevsky and Gogol, prefers tempering the positive aspects of life with the more unpleasant: “I made Mothers as an attempt to figure out how to live and not be on the losing side -- at least for the moment. Perhaps we need to embrace our sadness and our fears.”

'Mothers' a return to form for filmmaker Milcho Manchevski

On the surface, "Mothers" is three separate films barely glued together. To fans of Milcho Manchevski, it's a return to form -- one he used in his 1994 Academy Award-nominated film "Before the Rain."

The first vignette revolves around two little girls who falsely accuse a man of flashing them in the bustling streets of the Skopje.

The second takes us to rural Macedonia, following a camera crew shooting a documentary on life in a small town that has been evacuated save for two elderly people. The man and woman are seemingly related, but something in the past has left them estranged.

There's sexual tension in this vignette, also -- involving a woman and two men in the crew.

The finale is outright violent. It's a documentary on a reporter who chronicled the crimes of a sex killer -- with such detail -- involving a woman and two men in the crew.

The connection?

On a literal level, it's tenuous. But Manchevski goes beyond the literal -- to explore a deeper realm where sexuality, motherhood and the art of storytelling reside in conflict.

TIFF Diary: Mothers

Milcho Manchevski knows how to make a movie, as was demonstrated by his assured, Oscar-nominated debut film Before the Rain, which made Stephen Spielberg sit up and request a meeting. Its three intertwined love stories have been cited as precedent for the three stories of Mothers, but Mothers reminded me of a full, old-fashioned movie palace program -- though a somewhat oddly assembled one.

It begins with a comedic curtain-raiser, two cute kids who lie to the police about seeing a flasher, and the mother of the title arrives to haul them home while cursing, pushing a baby stroller, and wearing oddly inappropriate above-the-knee black lace stockings. The second story, the feature, is that of a three-man documentary film crew-- make that two men and one lovely woman, who starts off as the partner of one and ends up with the other -- who travel around in the country, documenting (and occasionally participating in) disappearing rural traditions.

The second feature is an actual documentary about a serial killer of middle-aged women. The man and woman are seemingly related, but something in the past has left them estranged.

The connection?

Milcho Manchevski and His Forever Theme

Milcho Manchevski is a Macedonian director and screenwriter, born 1959 in, Skopje. He moved to New York after high school and started his career since graduating from the film program at Southern Illinois University in 1981. Although he had spent most of his years in America, his 4 feature films are all about his hometown Macedonia, an Eastern Europe country that had long history with great culture and long term war problems.

In Manchevski’s film, the most fascinating thing to me is that he had kept telling different stories about his country and showed the same theme through these stories. From my point of view, I can only see two things in his film: 1, life and death; 2, the obsession about reality. These two themes ran through all his films, and I would like to summarize them as a kind of obsession of humanity in Macedonia from a Macedonian as an outsider of his own country.

Reality and fantasy in storytelling

Storytelling from characters are all existed in his four feature films. The photographer told the story about he made somebody killed people in Before the Rains; the story about how pasted people live in the other world in Shadows; In dust, the whole film is formed by two stories; In Mothers, there are stories about flasher, the story about the old brother and sister and the story about a murderer's death. From the writer's aspect, Manchevski made up or adapted all these stories, the most famous one is Before the Rains.

In Before the Rains, three stories arranged in a confusing timeline, which indicates to the famous script in the film, “Time never dies, the circle is never round.” Many people tried to figure out which story comes first, which comes after, and they all failed. Although these three story were told in realistic style separately, when you link them together, the whole story can be told from any point to start, and any point to end. I think the purpose of Manchevski is to trap a story into a piece of loop and twisted time, the heavy rain would never come to its end and the period of coldness would always go to the maximum point but never actually reach. So the whole story is totally a fantasy but showed a real feeling of Macedonia.

Dust is very alike with Before the Rain. It was made in 2001. It shows a clear point of view of Manchevski's storytelling way. He knew Before the Rain was his best playing with storytelling, and he had no interests in that anymore. I am surprised to find that I can understand the whole story withoutsubtitle even though I cannot understand Macedonian. The beauty of these two stories is that the deliberately confusion of reality and fantasy. In Before the Rains, the whole story is a fantasy, real world can’t be like that but human's feeling can accept that and feels like reality. At the beginning of Dust, the first layer of the story happened in New York, we can clearly tell that it is logically make sense. In the second layer, the old lady cannot remember the story well so she made mistakes, also because the story was not in place before her birth, so she cannot know it completely. So this layer is the overlay of reality and fantasy, though they still have a clear boundary between each other, such as the young man argued people’s number with the old lady, so that we could know this part could be fantasy. The third layer is the most confusing part. Luke dropped on the ground in the air, the girl brought Luke into the future and saw Elijah's death, 200 soldiers disappeared in the dust, and the black young man came from the past, the cowboy watched the plane fly through sky. In the end he told the girl on the plane that he was there, and showed her the black and white photo with him inside. Manchevski doesn’t care about what is real what is illusion in this layer, and deliberately mix the timeline of the two stories together.

In Shadows, we know it was a ghost story after we watched it. So basically the story was again a fantasy. But all the ghosts were presented in a real way. The girl pretend to be someone dressed like another cleaner in the building and when the neighbor dropped into the elevator, many people were there and trying to help, made them look like real people. It only showed some hints that indicate they are unreal. No one would link the bones with those vivid people, especially the girl Lazar fell in love with. All the real people seem to be interact with the ghosts. Like the first time when someone broke into the professor’s office, Lazar and the girl said he was not there together, actually the person can just saw and heard Lazar, but Lazar himself cannot feel any difference. The dropping into elevator scene also did not mention what happened after they opened the door, people supposed to see there’s no one inside, but it had been ignored in the story. The other thing that presented in a real way is that all the ghosts did not mention how to make them rest in peace, if they are real ghosts they would know it was the bones, but none of them mentioned directly. So in the story it was Lazar found out what had his mother story to the bones.

In Mothers, it was the way Manchevski put the three stories together blurring the line of real and fantasy. First, we cannot know the timeline of the boy (fake flasher), we saw he had been caught in the police office first, then in the second story we saw him drive to the countryside with his friends. We can either assume that he had been the fake flasher before the trip or after. But in the second story, we knew that the girl left her first boyfriend and be with two of her visits to her lady. At last, she introduced her new boyfriend didn’t come with her, she said she was pregnant and her mother was dead so no one took care of her, again we can either assume that the boy was in jail so no one took care of her, or she broke up with the boy so he was out of the story. Every suspect situation perfectly makes sense, but all we know is the part that Manchevski wanted to show. The two stories seem to be unclear because too many things needs to be explained had been skipped. The documentary is even funny as we told that the event is real, the people had been interviewed are playing their own characters, and the form of the third part is documentary. The only difference from what a real documentary supposed to be is the event had lasted for long time, and in the film Manchevski asked those witnesses to act. The documentary gave me a feeling that truth cannot be known and recorded. Those witnesses are just the closest people to the truth, but no one can truly reach it. The witness cannot remember every detail about it, and they were out of different purposes to decide to be in the film, they would speak for the story that they wanted to show. That is why the way Manchevski told the story in his film, reality can never be reached and fantasy can make people feel real spirits.

Macedonian’s life and death

Life and death also runs through all Manchevski’s films. Although he had all those fantastic and even legendary stories that attracted most of his audience attention, I think what he truly wanted to tell is the background of his all films—Macedonia.

I love Dust and Before the Rains best. They both show perspective from outsiders. The clearest sight to see a race can never be inside the country. For Macedonians, they cannot keep their minds thinking when they had a history of blood and fire for so many years. It can’t be a coincident that Manchevski is a person who lived outside his country for more than half of his life. To Manchevski, I think he enjoyed to show his point of view within the stories. Although I cannot know much about this country, but it’s not hard to imagine in a place like that, there’s nothing as simple as right and wrong. I heard many people said they think Before the Rains is a story that tells people violence is wrong so it bring suffers to people. While I was enjoying guessing what Manchevski really want to tell, I’d say I don’t think so. Manchevski is like a poet, a poet should not judge, a poet should hope. To me, he is always simply phrasing the death and birth, and hoping new birth can bring slightly better thing to this country. In before the Rains, three stories ended with death, but the structure of the stories shows that death can never be an end to Macedonians. I think to him death means eternity. Before the Rains is telling the story of people step in the big eternity loop by killing, dying, burying then killing again. I think this is the way how Macedonians live, they are alive, to live soundly, to love enthusiastically; when they are dead, to moan painfully; when they are born, to celebrate loudly, even though they know there are going to be fighting, killing, death in this land, but every one is hoping.

Not like Before the Rains, the death and life circle is perfectly round in Dust. The child told the story how she was born from death and buried in the land where she was born. In Dust, Manchevski treated death in a different way from Before the Rain. They buried the death killed by them sadly in Before the Rains, but in Dust, woman gave birth on the land full of dead body. It seems to be more hopeful in Dust, so many deaths sacrifice to one baby. The baby didn’t kill the robber when she was going to face her death, and her death made the robber’s heart became a little softer. Hope accompany with new birth, grow on the land of dust and death’s blood. Also, the time transition between the two stories indicates now Macedonians are better than past, and it will be better, which is indicated by the black man return to Macedonian (as a symbol of the old lady’s son).

If Before the Rain is a story about death and Dust is a story about birth, then I would say that Mothers is a story about being regretful and grateful to life itself, or I should say it’s just about life. Manchevski is a very ambitious director, and yet he successfully told one after another more and more great and complicated stories. Death, as one of this film poet favorite element, appears in Mothers as well. I cannot understand why he would like to present the most intense story in documentary way put at it the last. My understanding is a kind of regret to the crime, and a kind of understanding from the director to his country as well. Before the third story, the first one explains how Macedonians become cold towards the land (as a symbol of the old lady’s son). It’s the two children hadn’t been told to do the right things, their last generation and the generation before last one became numb after all the sufferings, so they pass this attitude towards their children. The second story is about salvation. It shows the good part of Macedonian, the part that war and suffering could not changed. The girl returned the old lady wedding jewelry, showed her the film they made, asked the old lady to live with her, all the thing she was done, is out of her pure humanity, indicates the salvation of the old days. Then the third story about the regret is making sense here.

I also love the title, Mothers. Being a mother means life (and to live) and death and at the same time, she would probably die when she gives birth, and she would have chance to raise her child, form the child’s personaliy, the child might either be a better person than her or be a worse person. To me, the title indicates Manchevski’s forever subject, his country Macedonia. The meaning of mother just like all his stories about this country, some are good, some are bad, but first he has to have so deep emotion and blood bond with mother country. That is why he dares to show us so painful memories of Macedonia; so conflicting death and vivid love and life; so strong and violent lifestyle and history, with all his love.
Oscar-nominated Macedonian director Milcho Manchevski mixes fiction with documentary in a film that hits home on an emotional rather than intellectual level.

BERLIN — Macedonian director Milcho Manchevski continues down his distinctive artistic path in his fourth feature, Mothers, which is about women of all shapes and sizes, not just maternal figures. Structured in three parts like his Oscar nominated debut Before the Rain, it mixes fiction (the first two episodes) with documentary for an interesting result that's more compelling than the film's underlying philosophical questions.

Manchevski says Mothers was inspired by the artwork of Robert Rauschenberg and is about the nature of truth, specifically our very subjective perception of truth. Perceptions of reality are stock themes for experimental filmmakers, yet despite the highbrow concept of Mothers, the film's three sections are relatively linear and hit home on an emotional rather than intellectual level.

Nevertheless, the film's unorthodox structure will make it the director's most theatrically limited work to date. Mothers will be lucky to screen outside narrow cinephile circles.

All three episodes are set in Macedonia, the first (also the shortest and weakest) in the capital city of Skopje. Although the intimidating Bea (Emilija Stojkovska) and her sidekick Kjara (Miljana Bogdanoska) didn't actually see the man who flashed their friend near their elementary school, they decide to report the event to the police. They stop along the way to buy some shoes and at the station take pictures of themselves on their cell phones. The girls play with the truth until somebody gets hurt, but none of the more serious questions about power and how reality can be manufactured are developed in an original way.

The film's second and strongest part is about a small TV crew traveling to Mavrovo, in the country's central west region, for a documentary on dying rural traditions. They find perfect subjects in a deserted village with only two inhabitants an ancient brother (Salaetin Bilal) and sister (Ratka Radmanovic) who haven't spoken for 16 years. The crew has its own intrigues as well: sound engineer Simon (Dmitar Gjorgjievski) is in love with camerawoman Ana (Ana Stojanovska), who's sleeping with the director (Vladimir Jacev).

While Manchevski would have us ponder the nature of the siblings' feud, the story's true power lies in its depiction of social change. The brother and sister's way of life has all but vanished in the modern world, a colorful bit of folklore for the bemused, urban filmmakers. That women have come a long way and yet are fundamentally still the same also couldn't be more explicitly shown in the differences between the free spirited, 20something Ana and the elderly woman who cracks dirty jokes as she talks about her arranged marriage. The only one to feel a maternal pull from the old woman, Ana starts up a friendship that goes beyond the documentary.

All of the actors are quite good, but the episode belongs to Stojanovska and Radmanovic. Aged to look like she's over 100, the latter's performance is hauntingly gripping.

The third installment in Mothers is an TV style documentary on a serial killer from the town of Kicevo, who raped and murdered three women in their 60s. Crafted like a mystery, although the story ran in the international news in 2008, it features interviews with the victims' families before disclosing the alleged perpetrator, Vlado Taneski, a respected crime reporter who lived next door to the three women and wrote about their murders.

Truth and fiction mix on several levels here, not least of which in regards the trust Taneski instilled in his neighbors, and his guilt, still being contested today. But Manchevski goes too far with police footage of the cadavers in the segment. Such images are gratuitous, even disrespectful of the victims' families. As in Before the Rain, elements from each segment are woven into the others, adding yet another layer to Manchevski's recurring notion of the cyclicality of life itself.
NJIHOVI FILMOVI: MAJKI

Ja pomislim, to je nekad bilo nečije dete, a Milčo, to je nekome bila majka.

Majki je omnibus Milče Mančevskog, neobične dokumentarno-dramski strukture koji u isto vreme i sa solidnom lakoćom čašća razne zanimljive stvari.

Svaka slike, od tri priče, (deluje tako) dvaput je duža od prethodne. U prvoj (igranoj) priči vidimo kako je jedna devojcica (11 godina, recimo) došla na ideju da policiji prijaviti manjaka koga nije ni videla (ali njene drugarice jesu!), i da potom za to optužiti očigledno nevinog čoveka. Na kraju filma upoznajemo njenu majku. I čujemo je kako sočno psuje i psuje.

I to se dešava u Skoplju.

U drugoj priči vidimo kako se kamermanka ekipe makedonske televizije, koja je u nekoj južnoj seoskoj zabiti Makedonije, snimala prilog o "preživelom stanovništvu" zbilja sa jednom bakom. U selu, inače, žive samo ta baka i njen brat, koji su u zavadi. Kamermanka baku zove "majčice".

U trećem, najpotresnijem delu, sa skoro neverovatnim izborom dokumentarnog materijala na raspolaganju, Milčo priča o čovjenom kičevskom serijskom ubici koji je ubio i silovao tri starije žene. O njima pričaju njihova deca, o njemu majka njegove dece.

Sklapajući ove tri, naoko tek jedva povezive, priče (prva i treća i imaju nekakvih zajedničkih tema) u priču o majkama, Milčo nam daje direktnje odake da ih posmatramo. U prvoj tek na samom kraju upoznajemo ženu koja je očigledno "kriva" za ponašanje svoje čerke, i za "tešku optužbu" koja stiže nevinog čoveka. U drugoj jedna žena koju su svi zaboravili sasvim slučajno stiče društvo dok čeka smrt. Starost je strašna i niko je nije učinio strašnijom nego Milčo kad je u bakina usta stavio pitanje: "Eh, dete moje... Kako se umire?"

U trećoj priči koja, između ostalog, i debatuje sa time da li je optuženi novinar (koji se ubio u zatvoru pod neverovatnim okolnostima) kriv za zločin (vraćam vas na prvu priču), virimo iza zavese brutalne crne hronike i lagano prisustvujemo tome kako od jedne žrtve Milčo lagano pravi majku od krvi i mesa. Bićete šokirani koliko malo prostora/ života deli izjave poput "želudac moje majke je bio pun sperm" do "samo tako me istučka kad me uhvatila sa tim momkom" (pišem po sećanju, ne zamerite).

Naravno da su igrane sekvence slabije od dokumentarnih, ali to je samo zato što život uvek priča najbolje priče. Ali gledajući drugu priču imašete problem da fiktivno razdvojite od dokumentarnog. Pa čak i u prvom delu rad sa devojčicama (naturšćicama) je odličan.

Milčov film je moderan, intrigantan i kompleksan kao neki od najboljih evropskih koje sam gledao u poslednje vreme i očigledno se radi o autoru koji baveći se do zuba Makedonijom uspeva da izdvoji stvari koje su podjednako relevantne i za njihove, i za nasne i za one tamo.

Kao jedinu manu izdvojio bih, a to činim samo zato što se radi o tužnoj realnosti i njihovih i naših filmova, domišljato sproveden, ali uvredljiv "product placement" sponzora čijom milošću je ovaj film verovatno i smiljen. Jabi ga, Milčo.
It’s all true, avrebbe detto Orson Welles. Quello che si vede è tutto vero. Il regista macedone Milcho Manchevski, autore di pochi film ma non facilmente dimenticabili, a cominciare dallo straordinario Prima della pioggia che lo fece scoprire nel 1994, si confronta con il tema della natura della verità e della menzogna. Per farlo ricorre, come già nel suo capolavoro, ad una struttura a tuffito che però questa volta si interseca soltanto a livello tematico e non narrativo. Suddissiva in un breve spezzone fiction, in uno più lungo che contiene falsi elementi di realtà e infine un documentario vero e proprio, il regista sperimenta un allontanamento graduale dalla finzione cinematografica che in realtà si rivela solo apparente. Non c’è nessuna garanzia, dice Manchevski, che la forma documentaristica contenga in quanto tale la maggiore garanzia di veridicità sugli eventi. Il regista si interroga dunque sull’essenza della verità: nel primo breve episodio due bambine accusano ingiustamente un uomo di essere un maniaco, inventandosi tutto sulla base delle chiacchiere delle compagne di scuola; nel secondo, una piccola troup gira un documentario sugli ultimi abitanti di un villaggio spopolato: nel terzo viene ricostruito quasi sotto forma di reportage giornalistico un terribile caso di cronaca nera avvenuto nel villaggio di Kichevo e che ha sconvolto il paese nel 2008. Nel primo caso la menzogna è soprattutto un atto di potere a freddo: Bea è ricca e viziata e costringe Kjiara a mentire contro lo sconosciuto prima corrompendola con regali e poi ricattandola, minacciando di toglierle l’amicizia. Nel secondo, che sappiamo essere fiction, l’inganno si nasconde nei due anziani ultimi abitanti di un villaggio, apparentemente “autentici”, in realtà attori provetti come la troup dei documentaristi. Più complessa è la vicenda che occupa la seconda metà del film, la storia di tre orrendi delitti aggravati da violenza carnale ai danni di anziane donne, compiuti proprio dal giornalista che scriveva la vicenda sul giornale locale. È tutto vero, dice Manchevski: “tutti e tre gli episodi sono fedeli ricostruzioni, parola per parola, di fatti realmente accaduti”. E proprio il documentario, nella sua tradizionalissima costruzione basata su interviste, pagine di quotidiani, spezzoni televisivi, suscita gli interrogativi più inquietanti: il giornalista è davvero il serial killer? Probabilmente sì, ma il suo improbabile suicidio in cella la notte stessa dell’arresto sembra mettere in dubbio molti lati della vicenda, soprattutto perché gradualmente Manchevski svela la corruzione e le falle del sistema investigativo e giudiziario macedone, vanificando di fatto qualsiasi dichiarazione rilasciata dagli inquirenti. Apparentemente in secondo piano ma riscattate dal titolo, al centro del film ci sono le madri, le persone da cui per primo nella vita impariamo la verità e la menzogna: madri volgari e corrotte, che corrompono le loro figlie con la loro cieca indulgenza, madri archetipiche e arcarie come la depreca e serena contadina del villaggio spopolato (in realtà straordinariamente interpretata dall’attrice Ratka Radmanovic), madri tragiche perché vittime di una violenza inenarrabile con la quale i loro figli non potranno mai riconciliarsi. L’esperimento estetico di Milchevski si rivela vincente e conferma, soprattutto nei due episodi di fiction, il suo straordinario talento di narratore di immagini e stili d’anime, la bravura nel dirigere gli attori di tutte le età e per la sua capacità di suggerire indizi allo spettatore anziché verificare delle tesi. Nel caso del documentario, spiega registra che la sua ricerca della verità nei suoi lati più oscuri lo porti troppo spesso verso il morboso: in tutta sincerità le terribili immagini dei cadaveri delle vittime (tratte dalle registrazioni video della polizia) sono superflue e soprattutto non molto rispettose delle vittime e delle loro famiglie.

Milcho Manchevski zwischen Realität und Fiktion

Mothers ist einer jenen Filme, die sich nicht direkt erschließen, und es dem Zuschauer zwei Stunden Länge nicht gerade leicht machen.

Was aber Manchevski’s ‘Vor dem Regen’ gehörte hat und wann, dass er auch eine Folge von ‘Die Welt’ gedreht hat, wird sich die Zeit nehmen für diesen Film. Es sind mehr oder weniger drei separate Filme, der erste (vorerst, mehr) erzählt von zwei jungen Männern, die einem Extremsport bei der Polizei zuzugehen, obwohl sie den Mann nie gewachsen haben. Die beiden spüren ihre Angst sehr genau ab und führen sich mit dem Handy an. Die Abenteuer filmen, was passiert, dann, nach ein paar Jahren, noch eine andere Episode. In der ersten Episode spielt der Regisseur den Polizisten der zweiten Episode, in der dritten Episode spielt der Regisseur den Filmregisseur. MOTHERS (123 minutes) R. THE LATEST from prominent Macedonian director Milcho Manchevski is an intriguing narrative puzzle divided into three contrasting sections: a vignette centred on two schoolgirls; a longer story about a trip to the countryside; and a documentary about a serial killer. Together they add up to a wry, sceptical reflection on the nation’s past, present and future. Screens as part of the Macedonian Film Festival. Reading Cinemas (Epping), Sunday, 7pm
Место, где в минувшем «Матея», режиссер Михаил Манчевский

№3, март, 2011 | Дмитрий Доспехов

Фильм «Матея» македонского режиссера Михаила Манчевского, представленный на Панораме Берлинале, начинается с недоразумения, почти с анекдота. Конический маленький, сидя в кафе, с селеновым благовонием на лице, который попался за компанией девятнадцатилетних школьниц, которые, в свою очередь, обсуждают недавнее появление в городе маньяка-ексбиониста. Идя по полю, вызовается лишь две девочки, и то, чтобы прогулять урожай. В конце концов, в поездку приходит зять из кафе, а проклятия приходят как раз одной из них. Плохая и реальная перверзия, криминальная простота оказывали бедняку — остается неизвестным.

По преимуществу фильм Манчевского решен традиционно: это та усредненная русская манера, давно привычная нам на европейских фестивалях, и на европейском же телевидении. Отобранные шутки, глупо встроенные актеры, усвоенные еще со времен первых успехов Кустурицы разнообразий топих. Все это, с решительным добавлением нелепости и нелепой эстетики, есть в первом эпизоде — о приключениях документалиста (режиссера, как некая инспектора Анна, шуточного рыцаря, тайно влюбленный в актрису), пришедших в заброшенное село, чтобы снять жительниц старика и старух, ветхих братьев и сестер, уже пятиват лет друг с другом не разговаривавших.

Однако, треть часть — вновь и вновь диссонируя с предыдущими — выводит фильм на новой уровень.

20 июня 2008 года полиция Македонии задержала журналиста местной «Утренней газеты» Владислава Танкого по обвинению в убийстве нескольких пожилых женщин в районе города Кичево, совершенных в последние несколько месяцев. Правозащитные органы заявили, что имеются веские доказательства причастности журналиста к убийствам трех женщин в течение последних пяти до семи лет. Перед смертью всех жертв подозреваемый насилием насиловал. Как стало вскоре известно, Танкого был также подозреваем в своей гибели, так что в дело внесли убойство и о деталях расследования. Через некоторое время, в Кичево, машинистка шокировала писателей, пытавшихся написать давний резонанс.

Завершающая часть фильма «Матея» представляет собой документальный репортаж о том деле — начиная от первой убийцы до загадочной смерти Танкого в горах.

Также реконструирован психологический профиль убийцы: причина того, что он сделал, коренится в детях.

Итак, в «Матея» Манчевский вновь использует трехчастную структуру, превосходящую его дебютный полнометражный фильм «Перед дождем» («Золотой дождь»), приз ФИПРЕСС в Венеции, номинация на «Оскар»; 1994). Первая и вторая части имеют ряд общих мотивов: первенство, расследование, сомнительное обвинение, но в целом внутренние связи еще более проиньюты, чем раньше, различие в настроении и в жизненной принадлежности, действительное проходят в разных местах. При этом главный герой, конфликт персонажа — не в немалой степени условная фигура Мачеля, но человек с камерой. Его страшную атмосферу психологии Манчевский пытается исследовать. Каждый сюжет фильма в той или иной степени удовлетворяется камерой. В первой части, пока полисцисты разывают, что делать с ненавистными событиями, подружка разыскивает, как снимают себя на мобильные телефоны. Потом следует новелла о съемках документального фильма. Наконец, люди, снимающие убийства в кадре, точное, растворено в репортаже, как бы, согласно с социально-культурными предикатами, переживая на максимальную объективность. Здесь зритель дает с автором один смешанный руки, погруженный в медвежьё пространство, манипулирующее звуковыми языковыми и линиям в композициях, перед которыми предполагаемое восприятие везде и первой фрагментации кажется малой пустыни. В некоторых местах жуткого визуального убийства в Кичево создано СМИ.

На пресс-конференция после премьеры фильма в Берлине режиссер сказал, что «Матея» — фильм о сущности правды. Хочется лишь уточнить: о сути правды на экране. В первой части его кино разъясняет (отвлекает — обманывает обыденным прошлым), во второй — рефлексирует на тему манипуляции, в третьей — показывает человеческую власть манипулятивных механизмов.

В результате у Манчевского получилось диалектическое точное исследование взаимодействия реальности объектной и реальности коммуникативной природы.

A по-чему все-таки акцент своим названием ставится на матерях?

Мать — в первом эпизоде комична, во втором центральной характерной старухи, так и не станувшей матерью, и княга Аня, готовящаяся родить. В третьем случае речь идет о женщинах, убитых именно за то, что они матери. Таким образом, материнство выступает как аналитический мотив, как потенция — уже усугубленная или не реализованная, как объект извращенного желания и в итоге как прошение. Для понимания фильма, впрочем, важно то, что материнство непрерывный, неидентифицируемый факт. Мать — источник одного безусловного, реальности будущей, становящейся жизни. Порождающее свойство матери философским образом устремлено в прошлое кадр — это всегда о прошлом, о том, что уже произошло, о том, «как люди жили когда-то», говорят слова документалиста из второй части.

Будущее материнства и прошлое смыкаются в фильме, в точке кинопрады, пусты по-апокалиптической субъективной. Это перерождение глубоко грандиозно: камера, как в смерть,

CARAS DE LA FICCIÓN

El director Alejandro Amenábar (Gótico, El Cid) presentó su nuevo filme, Arca de Ícaro, en el Festival de Cine de Aruba. La película, una adaptación de la novela de la escritora española Virginia Vallejo, narra la historia de un grupo de niñas que descubren la verdad sobre su pasado. Amenábar, conocido por sus filmes que cuestionan la realidad y la existencia, ha vuelto a sorprender con esta obra que mezcla elementos de ciencia ficción y drama. Arca de Ícaro, que se estrena el 10 de noviembre en toda España, promete ser una nueva joya del cine español.
