69 TENNESSEE
 Arrested Development
 1992

SHOT ABOUT 25 MILES FROM THEIR HOME base of Atlanta, Arrested Development's 1992 video for "Tennessee" seems light years away from the down-your-throat, cop-killing rap aesthetic frequently purveyed on MTV. The low-budget clip was cut by Macedonian director Milcho, who echoes, with stark monotones, the realism of Depression-era photographers. His fresh, unjailed perspective clearly evokes the people (played by band members, their pals and locals who stumbled upon the shoot) and feel of the backwoods South. "They wanted to do half of the video in a ghetto," says Milcho. "But I convinced them not to." The song, penned by the band's frontman, Speech, is about a spiritual dream dialogue with God and a return to roots, not in Africa, but rural black America. "We found two houses that were perfect for the job," says Milcho. "Dirt flooes, complete poverty. The funny thing was that there were old white folks living in both of them. I guess poverty cuts across racial lines." — D.J.

(Adnkronos/Cinematografo.it) - Il macedone Milcho Manchevski, invece, prende spunto da un video che fece il giro della rete qualche tempo fa (una donna cinese investita da un camion e rimasta a terra tra l'indifferenza dei numerosi passanti), per soffermarsi sulle derive che potrebbero condurci ad ignorare quello che accade sotto i nostri occhi pur indignandoci vedendo frammenti di immagini provenienti da chissà' dove.

Emblematico, tra gli altri, il corto di Edgar Reitz, che alla Mostra porta fuori concorso 'Die andere Heimat - Chronik einer Sehnsucht': la sala di un cinema si svuota, un uomo rimane solo, in lacrime, al termine della proiezione. Esce, e per strada ritrova i 'compagni di visione', già' intenti a maneggiare telefoni e tablet, pronti ad altre fruizioni. Fuori e' un esplosione di immagini, colorate, sovrapposte, veloci: l'uomo entra in un locale, si avvicina al bancone, il barista sfoglia il proprio tablet. E l'uomo, prendendo il proprio smartphone, decide di appuntare sul blocco note il ricordo della serata: 'Sono stato al cinema. Ho pianto', citazione dai diari di Franz Kafka.

Non manca, naturalmente, il contributo dei registi italiani: il presidente di giuria Bernardo Bertolucci ha realizzato 'Scarpette rosse', citando l'immezzo 'però' i suoi piedi e le ruote della carrozzella Guido Lombardi con 'Senza fine' rende omaggio a mia cara, me ne infischio").(segue)

Milcho Manchevski – Thursday

Ironic piece about people engrossed in their portable devices – one girl watches a video about people on the street failing to notice some tragedy, ponders the video while walking right past another tragedy everyone is failing to notice.

ON A FILM SHOOT, KONJSKO, MACEDONIA, OCT. 20, 2008 Will Rosenthal, 59, a Brooklyn social worker, photographs the actress Ana Lukic on the set of a commercial along the edge of Lake Prespa. "I'm a social worker, but in a previous life I was a filmmaker. My undergraduate degree was in film. I was in Macedonia watching an old friend of mine from film school shoot a commercial promoting travel to Macedonia. So they were shooting different locations around the country, and I just tagged long to all these beautiful places. It reminded me of maybe what Italy was like in the '50s, where it's underdeveloped but has this fascinating culture. It seems like every major civilization has marched through there and conquered it at one time or another, from the Romans to the Byzantines to the Ottomans, the Nazis, the Communists. They've all left their mark. It's much more intriguing than Western Europe. It's the Balkans, you know? It's rich, and it's complicated, and it has this real rugged beauty to it. It's in flux, so that's interesting to see. It hasn't achieved some end state of developed stasis."
